FOOD SHOPPER
By Susan K. Simpson
Va. Dept. of Agriculture & Commerce

June, of course, is Dairy Month. It's a shame somehow that congratulations and greetings to milk producers and processors has to be limited in time. It should rather be a continuous "thank you" for a job well done.

The U.S. dairy industry is the most productive in the world. If it's hard to believe, just check the facts. There were an estimated 470,140 farms with milk cows in 1974, compared with 1.1 million a decade ago. About 3,000 processing plants or about half the number ten years earlier processed some 952 million pounds of butter, 788 million gallons of ice cream, and a record 2.9 billion pounds of cheese in 1974. Utilization in these and other products totaled more than 61 billion pounds of milk.

In February, 1975 there were more than 11 million head of milk cows on U.S. farms and during the second half of 1974, milk cow numbers rose for the first time in more than 20 years.

Now, here's the real clencher. Production per cow totals over 10,000 pounds annually. Not equal to a "Ripley's Believe It or Not" column, that's a ton more produced than a decade earlier and more than double the average 30 years ago.

Just where would we be without all those dairy products? We can't guess, because we've never been without. Even if we're a far cry from dairy products are concerned, are truly taken for granted. There are few meal times or snack times that do not incorporate milk products in some way. From fluid whole milk, to all those in between, to buttermilk, to cottage cheese, to sour cream and yogurt, to hard and soft cheeses of all types, the list of all-American favorite milk products can go on and on.

So, when you see "ole Bossy" contently grazing or feeding at the trough, say a silent thank you. Her lot in life is truly a remarkable and important one.

The environmental control system for the complex, which is essentially complete, exceeds the Environmental Protection Agency 1983 guidelines.
